::Discussion Questions::

- 1. Why is accessible education a struggle that radicals should take part in?
- 2. What are the benefits for radicals of organizing within student unions? Do large organizations like ASSE and CONFECHE allow for more possibilities than affinity, or identity-based organizing? What are some of the pros and cons for each approach?
- 3. How can radicals make student struggles relevant to broader levels of society? How can they connect with other tensions faced under capitalism?
- 4. What role do building occupations play in larger student struggles? Are there buildings on your campus where this could be possible? What other forms of direct action can play similar role?
- 5. Is there an existing student union at your school? If so, what are their politics like and could you organize with them? If not, how could the political culture be changed?
- 6. What could non-hierarchical learning look like? How could we do entirely without statist models for education? How should these questions shape the way we organize within existing student movements?
