1. What are the differences in terms of the tactics and strategies available to you, based on whether you live in a big city, a small town, or a rural/non-urban area? What are some of the strengths and weaknesses of each terrain, as it relates to their potential for struggle?
2. What type of organizational structure would be required in order to combine the strengths and compensate for the weaknesses of these different types of terrain? What steps would be involved in setting up this type of network?
3. Do you see non-violent advocacy groups like Extinction Rebellion as playing a positive, or negative overall role in terms of the so-called 'climate movement'?
4. Climate change is often presented in apocalyptic, 'end of the world' terms. What effects do you think that this type of discourse has on resistance movements and broader society?
5. Is it possible for cities to be sustainable? What level of environmental impact is justified in the name of maintaining the benefits of cities, and what practical steps could be taken to make them more environmentally sustainable?
